Yard n' Garden Safety Tips Series

#4: Natural Gardening

Attention gardeners: are you concerned about using chemical fertilizers and pesticides in your home garden? Make this the year you learn more about organic and natural gardening. Here are some tips to get you started.

- Consider having your soil tested. A soil test can reveal pH and nutrient levels and help you decide which organic nutrient additives will help your soil grow healthy plants. Fall is a great time to test the soil so additives can be applied before winter.
- All gardens can benefit from compost, and you can make it yourself – for free! Compost feeds plants, helps conserve water, cuts down on weeds, and keeps waste out of the landfill. Don't worry if you don't know much about composting – even a minimally tended pile will yield useful results. To get started, find an area about 3 feet square. Alternate layers of brown material (kitchen scraps, manure) and green material (leaves and garden trimmings). Top with a few inches of soil. As you add more layers, turn and aerate the pile with a pitchfork. Keep your pile turned every few days, and add dry plant matter (leaves, straw, sawdust) if it gets soggy or smelly. Within two months you will have your very own stock of "black gold" to nourish your garden. Composting can even be done in the winter!
- Weeding… the bane of every gardener's existence. Reduce the need to weed by using mulch. Apply your choice of mulch to the ground around plants. Straw, wood chips, and lawn clippings are good choices. Mulch helps soil retain water, resist weeds, and contributes nutrients as it breaks down. (Remember to re-test your soil each year after mulching, as mulch can alter soil composition for the next growing season.)
- When it comes to insects, look for natural alternatives to chemical pesticides. Identify your culprit (worms, grasshoppers, aphids, etc.) and look for a specific strategy to combat it. For example, growing certain plants, such as dill and garlic, can repel some pests from your garden.
- Much more information about soil testing, natural gardening, and local resources is available through the SDSU Extension at igrow.org

MOTEL EMPLOYEE: Looking for a full time all-around person to assist the manager. The position has a wide range of responsibilities to be carried out indoors and outdoors. The position requires the person to be on their feet most of the day and there is a fair amount of lifting and carrying. Flexible scheduling but does require some weekends and evenings. No experience required, willing to train. Very competitive wage DOE. Contact Jackie at Best Western Plains Motel 605-685-3914.

The family of Jody Block would like to thank everyone for supporting her after her stroke. Thanks to the ambulance crew and medical staff that responded quickly and with excellence.
